George Rapp – Still Bringing Cutting Edge Online Security To Stonebridge Bank

West Chester, PA – October 17, 2006–Through the guidance of Senior Vice President and Director of Information Systems, George Rapp, West Chester, PA-based Stonebridge Bank remains in the forefront of online security while maintaining an efficient IT infrastructure.

George Rapp is one of the elite few residing in the Delaware Valley who has been featured in numerous print publications for his extensive experience with online security. He was recently featured in the latest edition of Novell Connection Magazine. Rapp is credited with reducing the costs of hosting the banks servers by 90%, allowing the bank to further the budget for software costs. George has been a strong asset to Stonebridge Bank. He has not only accomplished the much sought after goal of securing the online banking system, he has done it in a cost-efficient manner.

Rapp states, “Our management team is impressed not only by our cost reductions, but also that we have performance metrics that rival bigger banks. We’ve remained a secure enterprise despite the wide-spread virus attacks that have affected other organizations”

After being among the first of the community banks in 2005 to roll out Two-factor authentication, an additional layer of security for it’s online customers, Stonebridge Bank has continued to provide a highly valued sense of security for their customers.
